Broken Bow's Black Communities and Dunbar High School: A Glimpse from a Black Perspective Sidney Carter

I've wanted to write this book for years, but promised myself that I would not do so until I turned sixty five. With constant encouragement from my children, Broken Bow's Black Communities and Dunbar High School is finally a reality. My desire was to capture as much history as possible of my early years growing up in southeastern Oklahoma. To accomplish this task, I've recounted years of high school memories, events, and reunions. Broken Bow's Black Communities and Dunbar High School chronicles Broken Bow's early history and incorporation as a city. Early history, family life, leisure time, the black communities, and their citizens are characterized. Black churches, Dunbar School, successful Dunbar graduates, and athletic programs also are narrated. This book is filled with facts and stories many black citizens of Broken Bow experienced over the years, but may have long since forgotten. Broken Bow's Black Communities and Dunbar High School is a personal story. I write about the feelings and memories of my hometown, my high school, and the teachers that mentored me. Albeit small sections of the book may appear condemning of the segregated environment that existed early on in Broken Bow; however, as you read the book you will see I have tremendous love for my hometown, its history, and its citizens. My desire was that the many memories I have and my experiences be preserved as a legacy for future generations. Enjoy. Dr. Sidney Carter
