Cranium Fill Part 1 Hutton, C. F. Hutton, Hutton

2016 looms large as it is an American election year. The unexpected happens as a challenger to the established parties dominance causes a disturbance in the realm of 'politics as usual'. The country is weary of teleprompter treatises and packaged fabrications streaming to the electorate on a minute by minute basis. Will the 'lowly' be heard? Or will they continue to rage against a government sorely lacking in ethics, accountability and leadership without shame? Critical mass nears. It's the era of irritable reverberations and glorification devoid of merit. a time in which the largest commodity is fear; always the result, the remains of the day, after the defilement of hope is complete. It's Cranium Fill: that feeling you sense during that overbearing silence at the end of a scream, it's Cranium Fill when digital is mistaken for inspirational, when endurance is mistaken for elegance: yes, when significance becomes tainted by the patina of cliché, you are living in the era of Cranium Fill Part 1. Cranium Fill Part 1 is the saga of our time, an era when the necessity for greatness, of courageous acts, have never been more consequential or desperately required as the future of the most urgently needed nation on earth is the 'ante' on the table. How will the 'game' turn out? Is it a lay down or a bluff? Is history about to be ruptured again? Cranium Fill Part 1 is a minimally disciplined manuscript featuring the grand but grotesque, dysfunctional era of 'Too Much, Too Fast, Nothing Lasts' within which we live.
